

Peter Day (GB)

Business Correspondent
BBC News
London

Born in 1947. Peter Day was educated at Lincoln School and St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, where he took a degree in English. He was trained on the Institute for Printed Circuits (IPC) newspaper training scheme in South Devon, and then worked on the Daily Record in Glasgow. In 1974, he joined BBC Radio News in London, specialising in business, City and money news.

He briefly worked as an economics and industrial correspondent for TV-am in 1983, before returning to BBC as presenter and producer of the Financial World Tonight on Radio 4. Since 1988, he has been the presenter of the Radio 4 programme "IN BUSINESS". Peter Day was involved in the project of the European Business Channel as business editor in Zurich in 1990. The same year, he became business correspondent of BBC News and took over the early morning business slot on "Today" in 1997.

Peter Day won the first acclaimed Harold Wincott award for broadcast business journalism in 1989, and won it again in 2003 for "IN BUSINESS". He also received the Industrial Society award for business broadcasting.
